

The Verdigris bateau bath by William Holland is made from pure copper. Part of its Living Finish range, this vibrant Aqua hue is gently formed through natural environmental oxidation and presents a stunning work of art, deeply rooted within nature. $5421.60.

GET SOCIAL with us

Follow us on Instagram @kbbmagazine for more inspiration

Evolving elements

Fortunately, unlike fast fashion, interior trends don't change overnight – and this latest development is no different. In today's hectic world, we are seeking furniture and fittings that feel loved and lived in. With the rise in popularity of shopping vintage, brass and copper finishes which naturally patina over time offer beauty that will continue to form for years to come. Look out for designs using raw materials – copper in particular is great for kitchens and bathrooms, as it is naturally anti-bacterial too.

above Leabury Studio's Metals Collection features copper panels that are individually aged to give texture and create a dramatic verdigris pattern. Kitchens are priced from £50,000.

For stockists turn to p156

In Yvette's RADAR

Paint palettes

I recently visited Bert & May's London showroom to see the new paint collection. I was spoilt for choice, with a wide array of muted, chalky tones that all complement each other. £70.20 for 2.5 litres of eco emulsion.

Back to school

I'm a huge fan of the iconic Mustard storage lockers – and the collection is growing, as the brand has brought out new sizes and colours. Here's the Sharty in Ocean, £129, available from Rose & Grey.

Smart lighting

I spent the morning at Core Collective in Knightsbridge, London to see how the lighting systems by Crestron from TIG can enhance our wellbeing. Check out my column on page 42 for more.

Shaken, not stirred

Spotted at the Oliver Bonas AW19 press preview, this ice bucket and bar tools set is a must-have on your kitchen counter. £69.50.

